David Samole is a bankruptcy litigation partner at Kozyak Tropin & Throckmorton in Miami, Florida. He focuses his practice on commercial bankruptcy and insolvency-related litigation matters, as well as streamlining recovery and litigation resolution through workouts and financially distressed transactions.

David leads many of the Firm's representations of plaintiffs/claimants/victims/court-appointed fiduciaries and their counsel in personal injury, mass tort and fraud cases impacted by bankruptcy filings, receiverships and insolvency proceedings. This includes recovery of bankruptcy-related and/or insurance litigation proceeds for groups of claimants involving medical malpractice, wrongful death, construction defects, investment fraud, and other commercial liabilities.

David also frequently represents the Firm's clients to prosecute, defend or otherwise help resolve insolvency-related litigation, avoidable transfers and other financially distressed transactions, litigation and disputes.

David spends a meaningful amount of time on cases outside of court handling workouts, as he advises parties on all sides who are subject to pending litigation, post-judgment recovery, troubled loans and other financially distressed transactions to explore and address workout solutions to maximize recovery for the creditor/claimant/victim or minimize financial disruption to the debtor, borrower, guarantor, affiliate, etc.

David is a Past-President of the Bankruptcy Bar Association of the Southern District of Florida, and he also served as the President of the University of Chicago Alumni Club of South Florida.

When he is not working at the firm, David enjoys running, attending Miami Heat home games, and spending time with his family. He lives in Miami with his wife, Brigid, who is an attorney, and their two children.
